

What is FIT21?

FIT21 is a comprehensive market structure bill that creates a regulatory framework for digital assets, ensuring consumer protection, robust rules for crypto companies, and clarity for job creators and blockchain builders. By delineating the regulatory responsibilities between the SEC and CFTC, it aims to foster innovation, safeguard consumers, and secure American leadership in the digital asset industry.

House Update

On May 22, 2024, the crypto industry celebrated a major victory as FIT21 passed in the House of Representatives with substantial bipartisan support. The bill was approved with 279 votes in favor, including support from 186 Republicans and 93 Democrats. This success was largely driven by the efforts of StandWithCrypto advocates, who actively engaged by emailing and calling their congresspersons. This outcome underscores the broad bipartisan recognition of the need for a comprehensive regulatory framework for digital assets, which is essential for fostering innovation and maintaining the U.S.'s leadership in the digital asset sector.

Future in the Senate

While the bill's passage in the House is a significant win for the industry, the fight is far from over. FIT21 will now move to the Senate for consideration, where it must secure a majority vote before being sent to the President's desk to be signed into law. Continued engagement from advocates and industry stakeholders, like yourself, is more crucial than ever to ensure the bill's successful passage in this next step of the legislative process.
